Bundesvereinigung Logistik (BVL) - The Supply Chain Network brings together people in logistics and supply chain management – from industry, retail, and logistics services. This is both unique and logical, considering that the logistics sector in Germany generates an annual economic output of approximately €330 billion – only half of which stems from the visible movement of goods by service providers. The other half takes place within companies, through planning, management, and execution.

BVL's network consists of over 10,000 individuals from around 1,500 companies. These members are organized into 37 regional groups and international chapters worldwide. Local Chairperson teams support members and connect them at free regional events. Global corporations and regional players, companies and individual members – they all make up BVL, forming the largest supply chain community in Europe.
